Power reserved

Introduction

An executor of a Will who does not wish to act in the administration of the deceased person's estate can formally renounce his or her right to apply for a Grant of Probate. Alternatively, if an executor does not want to act at the outset, but wishes to retain the right to take out a Grant of Probate at a later stage, power may be reserved to that executor, enabling him or her to apply for a Grant in the future.

Implications

If an executor to whom power has been reserved subsequently decides to prove the Will, he or she will obtain a Grant of what is known as 'Double Probate'. The person applying for the Grant of Double Probate must sign a Statement of Truth and an Inheritance Tax Account with details of the estate for HM Revenue & Customs just as the other executors will already have done.

Alternative

A Grant of Double Probate is a somewhat cumbersome procedure. A more satisfactory alternative may be for the executor to prove the Will in the first instance, and subsequently sign a Trustee Power of Attorney appointing someone else, including the other executors, to act in his or her place. The duration of a Trustee Power of Attorney cannot exceed 12 months, although a further Trustee Power of Attorney may be signed at the end of each 12 month period.
